

Off-World Community Application

Proudly Human's Off-World Project is a series of habitation experiments in the most extreme environments on Earth. During each experiment of several months, a carefully selected team will arrive in an isolated location, build all of their infrastructure from scratch, run projects and live as a community. The experiment will generate data, exploration-driven innovation and research and be filmed for a documentary series.

Do you have the right stuff? We are looking for resilient, interesting people with diverse expertise, a passion for adventure, and a story to tell. Off-World Community members need skills to contribute to life-support, which includes safety, shelter, power, water, food and communication systems, as well as community spirit, which is anything that contributes to a sense of well-being within the team.

Apply here to join our Off-World Community and be considered for participation in upcoming habitation experiments in the most extreme environments on Earth.

Project proposal

Your project/s should contribute to the core aims of the Off-World Project which are to build and maintain life-support systems as well as create community spirit in extreme environments. Life support systems include safety, shelter, power, water, food and communications systems. Community spirit includes anything that contributes to a sense of well-being within the team.

You can propose one or two projects according to your diverse expertise and capabilities. For example, perhaps you are a paramedic and a karaoke DJ, or a mechanic and a yoga instructor.

You will run your project/s for the duration of the habitation experiment. Your project/s may be scientific research, engineering design and analysis, technology evaluation, a literary activity, an art project, a wellness investigation, an anthropological study, a journalism or communication project, a class or service you offer to the community, an exploration-related activity, to name but a few examples.

If selected, you will be responsible for supplying equipment and materials for your project.
